10a Paul Bunyan

Babe was white at the time of his death in 1937/38 on the hill across from the Lookout Inn. The legend was that a white cow on a hill signified good luck. In 1950, new owners bought the hill and Babe was painted blue. Paul was built in 1936. In 2009, Paul and Babe were moved to their present location and were restored. In 2007, Shinga-ba-Shores is located across US 23 from Dinosaur Gardens. Completed in 1998, this volunteer-built 8,500 square foot all-wood was designed and built from the ideas of area children. The playground reflects Native Americans, farming, lumbering, and Great Lakes trades. The park features a pavilion and ball fields as well.

Thunder Bay National Marine Sanctuary

This sanctuary is dedicated to protecting the Great Lakes and their rich history. In this 4,300 square mile marine protected area, the cold, clear water of Lake Huron preserves a nationally significant collection of nearshore, 200-foot historical shipwrecks. Through research, education, and community involvement, the sanctuary ensures future generations will enjoy these irreplaceable underwater treasures from our past.

The sanctuary provides a great view of the Lake Huron shoreline. The park features a pavilion and ball fields as well as a great view of the Lake Huron shoreline.
